

Life Lessons For Youth

Sharing, Imagination, Empathy, Social Skills, Family

TINYTALES.PRESS

By DR Rawson and Rick Allen
© Copyright 2024 - All Rights Reserved

Danny's Sudden Wealth Dilemma

Danny found a twenty-dollar bill on the sidewalk, and his first thought was, “Finders, keepers.” Then, he dreamed of a mountain of candy.

His mom noticed his sudden wealth and asked where it came from. Danny hesitated, tempted to fib, but was honest about it.

His mom praised his answer, adding, “Finding it does not mean it’s yours yet. Let’s look for the owner.” They discovered it belonged to a neighbor.

Returning the bill felt better than a candy mountain. Danny learned that honesty and integrity bring rewards.

Doing the right thing makes you feel like a superhero inside.

The Snowman's Scarf

Emma and her mom decided to build a snowman on a cold winter day.

They worked hard, laughing and rolling snowballs.

But when they finished, Emma noticed their snowman looked shivery. Imagining he was cold, she wrapped her favorite scarf around his neck.

Her mom smiled, admiring her compassion. The next day, Emma found her neighbors had added hats and gloves to their snowmen, inspired by her act.

Emma learned that small acts of kindness can spread warmth and friendship, even on the chilliest winter days.

Her winter snowman taught everyone in the neighborhood the value of sharing and caring.

Emily's Storytelling Adventure

Emily believed her story for the class was too "prosy," just ordinary details about her day. When she shared them with Mom, she was surprised to find enthusiasm and encouragement.

Her mom highlighted the creativity and joy in Emily's everyday observations.

This feedback helped Emily see that storytelling could transform the ordinary into the extraordinary.

Emily realized that a story's appeal often lies in how it's told, not in the plot itself.

Emily learned to appreciate the wonder in life, understanding that every moment has the potential to become a captivating story when shared with a fresh perspective and genuine emotion.

Feel the Paper

Evette and Stony loved their Dad and Grandpa. They especially loved to visit them at the industrial paper mill.

They loved the smell, and Grandpa would show them the wet pulp before it turned into paper.

Dad said, “*This industrial pulp can become a shopping bag, toilet paper, hand towels, or the paper used in your favorite books. The choice is made by the Paper Master.” He is your Grandpa.

Grandpa added, “Today, we’re going to make the paper for a book you might read in the future. When you read it, you can think of me and your dad.”

The Great Pillow Kingdom Adventure

Evan and Mia built a pillow fort. They created a magical kingdom within the confines of their living room. They declared themselves king and queen and lived in the Fortress of Dreams. They ruled over stuffed animals and action figures.

But when Mia wanted to expand their kingdom beyond the couch, Evan hesitated. He feared their creation would collapse. They carefully added more pillows, and their kingdom grew safely.

Evan learned that stepping beyond the familiar confines can sometimes lead to even greater adventures.

Together, they discovered the joy of expanding horizons and the value of trusting each other's ideas.

Moonlit Tales at Bedtime

Night's quiet embrace unfolds. I opened the pages of Tom Sawyer with my daughter, who was nestled under her blankets.

Each word was a magic spell, casting us back to days of mischief and adventure.

As Tom and Huck enjoyed their escapades, her eyes sparkled with wonder, mirroring the glow of our single lamp.

In these moments, time stood still, and the world outside faded away.

It wasn't a story but a bridge between hearts, a shared journey into imagination.

More precious than gold, this tradition wove the fabric of dreams and laughter, stitching us closer with every page turned.

"Nurturing Young Minds, One Tale at a Time."

Statement of Purpose at Tiny Tales Press

At Tiny Tales Press, we ignite young minds with "Life Lessons for Youth," an anthology of 31 stories by DR Rawson and Rick Allen. Each story imparts valuable lessons to children aged three to ten.

This collection embarks on a journey of kindness, courage, and curiosity, fostering emotional intelligence and social skills through stories penned by human intelligence.

Each narrative inspires, teaches, and nurtures a love for exploration.

More than tales, this book is a companion for young minds to dream and grow, bridging magical stories with foundational reading skills. It aims to inspire a new generation of thoughtful readers.

Nurturing Young Minds, One Tale at a Time.